Transformational changes in manufacturing, in mobility, in logistics, in data use and in artificial intelligence lead to a 'digital revolution' of industrial systems. While the '4th Industrial Revolution' is largely driven by companies and governments of the advanced economies, Asia with more than 55% of the world's Internet users and a rapid ascent of smartphone penetration will define the world's mobile internet. In the industrial sphere Germany claims a position as lead market and German companies are leading suppliers of industry 4.0 solutions. The conference pays special attention to how Germany, Europe and Asia can 'join forces' to succeed with mutual benefit in the upcoming 4th industrial revolution. This includes a discussing cooperation and competition and topics like robotics and automation, intellectual property rights, setting of standards, cyber security, as well as implications for employment, development, and needed qualifications.
